Susie Crazy Day Underline unsafe practices.

Susie was in a hurry. It was time to fix lunch for her two older children but she still had to unpack the groceries from their early morning trip to the store and fix the meal. Luckily the baby was asleep so maybe she could get the two boys fed before the baby woke up.

For the second time, Susie started unpacking bags when she heard a big CRASH! Susie got the package of chicken on the counter just as Billy and Bobby came charging in. Uh oh! The dog was loose and came bounding in with them. Susie couldn't get anyone to settle down. Food! She thought. Food is the answer. She grabbed the cold cuts that had thawed on the counter, the cutting board and knife out of the sink, some bread and put the sandwiches together. She took the grapes out of the grocery bag. The grapes and the sandwiches went on the table. She sliced tomatoes and lettuce on the cutting board for the small salad and piled it into a bowl. Let's see, milk to drink. Their sippy cups were in the fridge, but which one belonged to which kid? Never mind, no one was sick and it's all just family germs.

Waaah! Waaah! The baby must be starving. Susie grabbed the morning bottle, dumped the leftovers and quickly refilled it with formula and water. In her rush she dropped the lid. It did a few somersaults across the floor, landing under the table where Fido gave it a sniff and a lick. "Fido, no!"

“Mommy, look!” exclaimed Bobby. “What’s that dripping on the floor?” Yuck. It was the chicken package on the counter. No time for the baby’s bottle now, but where was his pacifier? Susie grabbed the dishrag out of the sink. There was the pacifier, under the dishrag. She quickly cleaned the counter and floor, tossed the dishrag and the package of chicken into the sink and gave the baby his pacifier. Much better, she thought. Why did I leave the chicken on the counter, anyway? The dog could have gotten it!

After the boys finished their lunches, Susie changed the baby’s diaper and settled herself and the baby into the rocking chair. As he started to drink his bottle, Susie sighed “Phew, thank goodness, a moment of peace.” Susie was quite pleased with herself. She had handled one catastrophe after another. Gazing at the baby she thought, “Good for me! Even after all that, I managed to keep everyone happy and safe!” Or were they?

Picnic Panic!. Underline the unsafe practices.

It’s a beautiful summer day and the children at ABC Child Care are getting ready for an outdoor picnic lunch. That morning, provider Jordan is busy getting a head start on preparing the lunch menu. She is proud of herself for remembering to take the frozen raw chicken breast out of the freezer the night before. It’s been defrosting on a cutting board on the counter overnight.

Everyone loves a good chicken salad!

She grabs a bag of potatoes from the pantry and moves the chicken out of the way so she can use the cutting board. She notices that some of the juices from the chicken have leaked out onto the cutting board, and quickly wipes it up with a rag. She begins chopping the potatoes for the potato salad when one of the infants starts to cry and needs a diaper change. She quickly changes the diaper and returns to the kitchen, just in time to see the cat licking the chicken on the counter. What a pest! A quick rinse with water will do the trick, she thinks.

Jordan puts the chicken in the oven and rinses the cutting board with water. She grabs the container of strawberries and puts it in a dusty old cooler that she pulled out of the basement (ignoring the cobwebs that have accumulated in the bottom of it). We’re running behind schedule, she thinks. As soon as the chicken and potato salad are finished cooking, she quickly packs them in the cooler with an ice pack, hoping the hot chicken won’t melt it too much. Then she and the kids are off to the park for their picnic. “Oh well, we will be eating in 3 hours anyway. We should be just fine. No need to panic!”
